According to Christian principles, it is evident that God will not save all humankind. This is mainly because not all human beings follow His path. Christian principles are those values that are derived from the teachings of Jesus.

They are communicated by Christians all the way through the history of this religion. Although God would like to save all people, it is not possible because some of them do not follow His teachings outlined in Christian principles. God uses the Bible to give instructions to the people on how they can live according to His will. For that reason, one can infer that following God's path means adhering to what the Bible says. God will not save all humanity as not all people are living due to His principles and Christian values.

One important aspect to support this is the fact that the Bible says that one will be saved if he/she, first, confesses with his/her mouth that Jesus is Lord. Secondly, believes in his/her heart that God raised Himself from the dead. This implies that one would be saved on condition that he/she confessed that Jesus is Lord. In addition, one should believe that God raised Himself from the dead. Therefore, if one does not believe in this, or one does not confess it, then he/she is not eligible for being saved as the abovementioned points make God's stipulated path to achieve salvation. Deviating from this path will mean no salvation for one from God.

There is no doubt that God wants people to love one another. Love has greatly been emphasized in the Bible. This can be seen in the numerous verses that have highlighted this issue. According to Christian principles, one should love his/her neighbor as he/she loves himself/herself. Jesus told His disciples to love one another as a sign to the world and the people surrounding them. He also told His followers to have unconditional love. Jesus said this would involve loving their enemies and praying for those who persecute them. He even went a step further asking His followers what reward they get by only loving those who love them. However, not everyone does this. One can find that the part of humankind that lives by this principle is very small. Most people do not even love themselves because they are doing themselves very many injustices, knowingly and unknowingly. Such individuals cannot therefore manage to love their neighbors. This can evidently be seen particularly in today's generation. Most people are very individualistic and do not even care about their neighbors or people in need. This has been brought by the capitalist nature that has been highly emphasized in the current world. For this reason, most people fall short of God's standards and hence do not follow His path concerning love.

According to Christian principles, one should not be violent. This is supported by Jesus when He said, "If a man strikes you on one cheek, turn the other cheek". By this, Jesus was trying to emphasize the fact that revenge is not in line with God's path. However, most people do not implement this principle. Very often people are revenging, and, in most instances, in a greater scale than the original act deserved. In addition to this, the Lord's Prayer clearly states "Forgive us our trespasses as we forgive those who trespass against us". Therefore, forgiveness is important if one were to claim that he/she is following God's path. Conversely, one finds that people really do not value this virtue. Most believe in avenging rather than forgiving. For this reason, when one considers this principle, most human beings do not follow God's path and hence cannot be eligible to be saved by God.

In reference to Christian principles, marriage is an honorable institution in the society. Faithfulness/fidelity is emphasized in this issue. "Those whom God has joined, let no man put asunder." The Bible greatly values the marriage institution and family. In the contrast, one can find that infidelity in the current world is very common. This has been leading to a lot of divorces. It has gone to an extent where some countries have even legalized prostitution, either directly or indirectly. Moreover, there are many cases of families breaking up, sometimes even due to issues that can be resolved only that the parties involved do not value having a family. Most people, therefore, are not faithful either to God or their spouses. For that reason, they are not following God's path and therefore God may not save them.

The fact that the commandments clearly state that one should love God above all others and not worship any idols/gods is of a great relevance. God clearly states that one should not adore any other god, except Him. However, this does not happen in real life. One can find that some people even use the identity of God in the nastiest situations forgetting that God's name is sacred and should not be mentioned without the due respect. In the modern world, very many things have come up that people give a higher ranking as compared to that of God. This is the modern-day idolatry. For example, many people value money, fame, power, pleasure and status more than they value their spiritual life. There is excessive attention being given to acquiring material things like cars, houses, jewelry, clothes, entertainment and physical appearance to name just a few. For this reason, one can find that most people are not in line with God's path which He has stipulated in the Bible.

Living a moral life is another Christian principle. The Bible emphasizes that the human's body is a temple of the Holy Spirit. It is God's expectation that people honor Him with their bodies. Jesus said that murder, adultery, theft, greed, slander, sexual immorality, deceit, malice, arrogance, envy and false testimony are some of the vices that one should avoid in a bid to live a moral life. There is a notion that immorality is the issue concerning only sexual sins. This has made many people think that since they are not sinning sexually, they are moral. However, this is not the case. A simple act of giving false testimony or stealing somebody's pen is considered immoral in God's eyes. In the current world, morality has really lost value and at times it even looks backward to be moral. This shows how much humankind has fallen away God's path and, consequently, God may not save it.

Another important issue is practicing what one is preaching. One should not be a hypocrite. Jesus could not stand the Pharisees of His time. They were both religious and political and insisted on very strict observance of the Biblical laws but were greedy, snobbish and self-righteous. Jesus said that the Pharisees were like whitewashed tombs that look beautiful on the outside but were "full of dead men's bones and everything unclean" on the inside. He said that they appeared to be righteous to people but were full of hypocrisy on the inside. This matches the current world where most people who claim to be Christians are actually hypocrites. This is very evident all over the world where very nasty things have been done by people who claim to be true Christians. Moreover, there are very many false prophets and people wearing the cloth. The current church has a very high level of hypocrisy where one can find that people are not what they claim to be. Therefore, it can be seen that people have deviated from God's path.

The Bible tells people to share generously their time and money/resources with those in need. Everyone definitely has something he/she can offer; if not money, then his/her time. One can visit a sick person, be a friend to the lonely, mourn with mourners, join those who are rejoicing or even do volunteer work to name just a few. Every person has a duty to the poor. However, one can find that very few people are concerned with this. A common saying goes "A man for himself, God for us all." This should not be the case. People should help one another for the overall wellbeing of the society. Humankind has fallen off God's path as humans do not adhere to this principle. Another important aspect to consider is humility. God's path, as illustrated in the Bible, emphasizes that people should be humble. Actually, Jesus taught, "Blessed are the meek/humble for they shall inherit the earth". Being humble does not mean in any way reducing one's self-worth. Humility actually differentiates the wise ruler from the arrogant fool seeking power.

However, in the current world, one can find that this virtue is not valued. There are many very proud people who do not even respect others. They are very aggressive, arrogant and boastful. In addition, despite the Bible really emphasizes on honesty and integrity, very few individuals are actually honest. Many people make false statements and give half-truths. This is very common in business and political dealings, advertising, gossip and other everyday life circumstances.

In conclusion, God is not obliged to save these people since they have deviated from His path. The above analysis clearly illustrates that not everyone will be saved because not every human follows God's path and therefore, even though God could save everyone, He is not obliged to do so. Deviating from God's path means that even though God would want to save everyone, He will not do it.
